Shareholder

Chattanooga | 423.209.4160 | chill@bakerdonelson.com

Cameron Hill, Baker Donelson's former Professional Development Shareholder, focuses his practice on construction, commercial, and employment-related litigation matters and is located in the Firm's Chattanooga office.

While Mr. Hill's experience is diverse, he focuses on construction, employment, ERISA and general commercial litigation matters, trying cases to conclusion or decision through alternative dispute resolution.

Mr. Hill handles a variety of construction issues, including claims related to defects, delays, site conditions, change orders, liens and other contract disputes. His employment law experience includes discrimination claims brought under various state and federal statutes and covenants not to compete. His ERISA and non-ERISA benefits practice includes claims related to long term disability, short term disability and ERISA pension benefit disputes. He also represents clients involved in general commercial disputes and premises liability.

Mr. Hill co-authored the Tennessee chapter on Mechanic's and Materialman's Lien Law for lienlawonline.com.

While at Tulane Law School, Mr. Hill served as Managing Editor of the Tulane Maritime Law Journal. From 1995 until 1997, he served as law clerk to Judge Curtis L. Collier, United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee.

Representative Matters

- Multiple successes in defending insurance companies' denials of long term disability benefits, both outright and on appeal.
- Won a breach of contract case for a large national security corporation and secured recovery of more than $300,000 in attorneys' fees under prevailing party clause.
- Represented an insurance company in a denial of ERISA benefits case, successfully arguing against the claimant's recovery of attorneys' fees and saving the insurance company more than $160,000.
- Successfully won and reversed a trial court verdict on appeal of business divorce litigation, including breach of mergers & acquisition buy-out contract, recovering over $350,000 in attorneys' fees on behalf of the client.
- Successfully defended an insurance company in an accidental death case involving the claimant's operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated.
- Successfully prosecuted a union trust fund's claims against a contractor for failure to pay fringe benefits and recovery of attorneys' fees and sanctions, totaling more than $1.6 million.
- Obtained a favorable opinion from the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals on an ERISA action, affirming the district court's grant of judgment on the record.
- Successfully defended a meat manufacturer against claims filed by hourly employees at meat processing plants seeking pay for time spent donning and doffing gear, washing, and walking. The case was conditionally certified and tried before a jury on liability issues following extensive discovery. The jury ruled in part in favor of the plaintiffs and in part in favor of the defendant. The case settled before the parties tried the damages phase of the trial.
