Tyler Bishop partners with business clients to create solutions in intellectual property, commercial litigation, and class action matters.

Mr. Bishop is an experienced litigator defending his clients' intellectual property rights at all stages of litigation in federal and state courts. He leverages his trial experience to serve as a trusted advisor to clients navigating the complexities of IP litigation and provides actionable, tactical advice.

Mr. Bishop's intellectual property experience includes patent, trademark, copyright, trade secret, unfair competition, and restrictive covenant disputes involving individuals and corporations, including declaratory judgment and infringement actions.

Mr. Bishop is also an experienced appellate lawyer. His appellate experience includes successfully defending trademark and software rights in ownership disputes and developing new law on issues of first impression in state and federal courts of appeal.

He also assists clients in high-stakes business and commercial disputes, including class actions.

Mr. Bishop practices extensively in federal and state courts throughout the country, including before the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, and the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board.
