

Sheila Burke Q&A with Washington Business Journal

Sheila Burke talks with the Washington Business Journal about her new role as chair of Baker Donelson's Federal Public Policy Group. Ms. Burke discusses personal attributes that have made her successful in her career.

"I think my education and practice as a nurse made me particularly attune to communicating with people in a way that was easily understood—so my verbal communication skills. And, the fact that I seek out people who are smarter than I am and better at doing things than I am. I think that makes me a better person by having strong people around me."

Read the Article (subscription required)